Dear Miss Johnson:

Thank you for sending me a copy of your book. There is so much in it that I did not know - and to think how hard you worked on it. It interests me very much.

I am glad you think that "All in the Day's Work" will be helpful to your students in journalism. What most young women who enter journalism need is more faith in down right hard work, more acceptance to the idea that they have a hard road to travel before they get to the top, and less belief in luck and pull.

It is an interesting job teaching journalism. One of the best texts is, I think, that after all is said and done you must make your own way.

Very sincerely yours
