New York City.

My dear Miss Tarbell:

The National League of Women Workers, which is an Organization for the purpose of organizing, directing and developing non-sectarian, self-governing and self-supporting clubs of working women, is to hold its Biennial Convention at Bryn Mawr College from June 10th to 13th. The Organization has about twenty to twenty-five thousand members and there will probably be about 500 delegates present during the sessions.

We believe, too, that we have a contribution to make to corporations and firms having welfare and personnel departments and are, therefore, planning to have a large representation of such a group over the week-end. With this in view, the program for the week-end will largely center upon industrial discussions.

The Saturday morning conference, June 12th, we expect to call "Co-operation between Employer and Employee -- What do we mean by it?" We would very much like to have three sides presented, the employer's, the employee's, and I am very anxious to know whether it would be possible to have you present the theory of it. With your long experience and your very definite interest along these lines, I believe that you would have a very definite and most valuable message.

Might I perhaps have the opportunity of talking it over with you further, as it is most difficult to tell you in this way of the real character of the Organization and the real need which I believe these girls need now for a better understanding of the industrial situation?
