Dear Miss Tarbell:

My book has run so long that I have decided not to write a concluding chapter. I shall break off with the evidences in 1878 that the depression following the panic of 1873 had run its course, and that the nation was just beginning to enter a cycle of prosperity again. From that point I think you can go ahead without fear of overlapping my book.

On the very day you wrote me I left the volume of photographs from the Worcester Industrial Institute at your home, in care of the superintendent's wife. I gave her a slip with your name on it, and I trust that she has delivered it safely.

The Kaempfert volumes are here at my office, and I shall leave them at your door tomorrow. I shall also leave a list of some other books which I have and think might be useful to you. Won't you check off any you would like, and let me send them to your apartment?

Sincerely Yours,

Allen Harris
