Death of Judge Gillespie.

Information of the death of Judge Joseph Gillespie reached the city yesterday. He died at his home in Edwardsville at 1:30 o'clock on Wednesday, at the age of 75 years 4 months and 15 days, of typhoid fever, brought on by taking a violent cold during the late severe weather. He was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his death will be severely mourned in this city, where he was well known, as well as throughout the state.

Joseph Gillespie was of Irish ancestry and was born in New York City in 1809. He moved with his parents to this state in 1819. He received his legal education under the fostering care of the Hon. Cyrus Edwards and commenced the practice of the legal profession before Judge Breese in 1837. In 1840 he was elected a member of the house of representatives of this state, and there became very intimate with Abraham Lincoln, the friendship being broken only by the death of the latter. In 1847 he became a member of the state senate, and continued to hold the position for about eight years. In 1861 he went upon the Circuit court bench and served for twelve years, since which time he has been content to practice his profession. He was one of the earliest and most powerful advocates of the system of internal improvement which has since given almost every producer in the land a market for his crops, by providing transportation by means of railroads.

Such is a brief synopsis of the life of one who, by his untiring industry, masterly ability and unwavering principles of honor and honesty, rose from the humbler walks of life to be one of the most distinguished citizens of this great state. He leaves
