Dear Mr. Young:

Certainly I should not think of quoting from your letter without letting you see just what I had taken, and how I was working it in to my general theme. This not only for your protection but for my own. I have learned that often when I think I understand the meaning of the thing I am quoting I really have missed the writer's thought. I should particularly dislike to do that in your case, so you may depend upon me to submit for your approval anything I use from your letters or speeches.

Miss Chandler tells me that you and Mrs. Young are off for a cruise. I hope that it will be a happy and restful one.

Very sincerely yours
