YOUTH TODAY.

The significant fact made patent at the "youth today" meeting was that there is nation-wide organized effort to be of help to youth in the conditions which they are facing. Forty years ago, when the speakers at the meeting were themselves still young, there was no such national or united concern. Whatever was done was local in scope and neighborly in spirit. Now the whole nation is roused to a consciousness of a responsibility for the millions out of school and out of work who are on the verge of manhood or womanhood but see no gainful job immediately ahead, see no chance of early entrance into normal family relations on which our social institutions rest, no promise of freedom to live a "conscientious life in an unconscientious world," as one of the speakers said.

It is not giving food or shelter that is the prime concern of these private agencies of neighborliness. The Federal Government has through its contribution to the States and to the localities given its assurance of material relief. The ministry to the needs of the mind and spirit of youth must come through individuals and groups of men and women who are determined that the best that the race has acquired through its ages of struggle shall be passed on to generations beyond. And that "best" is character. It is something more than what neat and raiment can give.

Miss TARBELL in her introductory remarks gave a definition of character:

Character means respect for and loyalty to one's inner self, a passion to keep it inviolate; it means unfailing consideration for the rights and needs of one's fellows. It means the courage to fight the battles and make the sacrifices which are inevitable in preserving the integrity of one's soul and practicing sound and unfailing consideration for others. It means the courage and the intelligence to recognize that man's of this American sibyl, who knows the economic history of America as well as its moral laws, is that "with character there is no failure, without it there is no success."

Cynsaural insubordination.

Even so violent a critic of the Supreme Court
Wells has admitted in the last 50 years
in this country - the late John McCarty
- H. J. Adams - infers that the the materials for the on which he bases
his charges come from Cynsaural insubordination --- "virtually all of the important matter in this chapter
at least 3/4 of all the solid information in this work can be deduced
from reports & debates of the Congress &
from dependent sources"
and he goes on to celebrate Cynsaural

by being adopted rules which make such insubordination impossible - Which is of course nonsense - In the last 40 years insubordination exists -
- rule - p. 283.

Undirected Leisure

Time 9/22 Ed The Perfect Chief.

Here is the tribute paid to KITCHENER by one who was close to him for three years:

By any who had the good fortune to enjoy in close association his confidence, his ready and humorous adoption of constructive suggestions and the free hand with entire absence of fussing over detail he accorded for their carrying out, his loyal and constant support in face of that detraction—which in the East is the natural pastime of undirected leisure—by any, still left, that knew these, he will also be gratefully remembered as the Perfect Chief.
