Copy of a Letter written by hand from Farm to Dr. Clark

Dear Dr. Clark:

When I returned from the country recently I found waiting me your Psycho-Biography of Lincoln. I certainly regret that it was so long a time in finding me. It deprived me of the pleasure of promptly thanking you for remembering me, as well as the satisfaction of reading the book,

It is the book that I have been hoping for. Lincoln is a challenging subject for the psycho-analyst but you are the first, so far as I have read, that has more than scratched the surface. Your study of the materials has been wide and thorough and you have used your findings admirably. I see that I shall always have your volume at hand when I have a Lincoln piece in the pot.

What pleases me particularly is your sense of the profundity of the man's nature, as well as of the diverse moods that swept that deep pool.

I cannot pretend, unscientific as I am in psycho-analysis, to always follow you easily, always to agree, but I am always stimulated. It is a valuable book you have written and I thank you for writing it and especially of course for remembering me.

Yours very sincerely
