

After War Was Sealing

Chapter XIV - New Ideals

*Sealing
Strike
Prohibition*

No estimate seemed to have been made so far as strike - we my observation went of the effects of the / won ten cents a day or we wanted a shorter day from the strike. Nobody estimated what was lost. There could be no estimate of the loss in the steel industry. / You could cut suspicion with a knife of the Homestead strike. / There could be no estimate, I was convinced, of a strike I followed down on the Jersey Coast or of the effect out in Illinois as I wandered about lecturing, talking always with women. Interesting the sides one picks up. It was in Illinois in this region during the strike that I got my strongest impression of the ^{harm} ~~may~~ prohibition was doing. When you lecture you have days and nights in odd places and always I made it a point to talk with women. (See article on Prohibition)

Harvard

It was interesting through this effort of mine to show just what prohibition was doing in certain spots. I was taken as selling myself to the enemy ~~in the same way that my efforts to show~~ one leader, a leader of ability, fine family, etc., wrote me bluntly that if ~~he~~ knew I was for ~~sales~~ ⁱⁿ ~~she~~ ^{so} would have been glad to seen to it that I was financed / my work / that I need not have sold myself to the other side. (That was the gist)

It was the kind of reaction I was to get later to my luke warm attitude towards woman's suffrage. "Remember the harm we can do you," ^{distinguished} one / professor of psychology told me. "I can discourage the sale of your books."
