"Sergeants" Airborne Despite Weak Support, Technical Difficulties

by Bob Lowing

Nels Julius and David Ottey manage to make airborne Allegheny Playshop's current production "No Time for Sergeants." Julius, as a forty-five year old Air Force sergeant, authoritively uses his massive form as a bludgeon and a bare-footed ballerina to blast home a belly laugh on the universal character of the victimized sergeant. David Ottey, manned with a magnificent Georgian "yo'all cher" jargon, creates the southern plowboy who is the spine of the play. He lumbers through scene after scene, setting the pace and gradually unfolding the story of how he and his buddy, Ben Whitledge (played by Rodney Anderson), received their medals. The tensions that Julius, Ottey and Anderson can weave between them is the factor that breathes life into the play.

Allegheny Playshop's "No Time for Sergeants" is an intimate play. From the moment Will Stockdale (David Ottey) steps in front of the curtain into the spotlight to tell all his friends "How I Got My Medal," you somehow feel at home. He laughs with them and jokes at them, making the audience feel that they are the folks at a social gathering. Will then steps back to tell his story. He takes you from his mountain home into a classification center; you get involved in a barracks brawl and learn how to clean a latrine; there is a scene with Will and Ben in an aircraft that flies through Yucca Flats during an A-Bomb blast, a subsequent parachute jump and return to the base and an irregular transfer of the two boys into the Infantry one night in the dark woods. It's his story and you are with him all the way, right up to his last "goodnaaht". Intimacy with the audience and the infinite number of sets involved create the two biggest problems in the production.

What makes people laugh? Lines are never enough to make an audience laugh, they need timing and surprise. "Sergeants" is full of surprises, but the timing comes from the actors. Anderson is Will's friend, full of youthful innocence and bubbling over with enthusiasm He is a kid who kicks his knapsack at the right time, wipes his nose at the right time or just sniffs. He can draw a laugh just by awkwardly crawling into his bunk. He becomes a master at pantomime. Nels Julius is a mature actor, calling in every trick he knows — it may be a bellow, a shrug, his face lighting up with an idea or just a look; but he always gets a laugh. He makes one laugh to look at him. Ottey can feel what the audience wants, using a timely sheepish grin or his polished "one foot in the furrow walk". The individuals get away with this audience contact, but when the supporting actors are expected to carry the action, the play bogs down. In the second act, Will and Ben are crew members on a plane

Academic Committee

The chairman of the Academic Committee, Harry Blaney, listed the accomplishments of the past year. Among them were the establishment of a study day before exams and the sending out of a reading list to incoming freshmen.

Robin Biggs, chairman of the Independent Studies Subcommittee, reported a definite interest shown by both faculty and students in Independent Study. A lack of both funds and faculty limits the program to a great extent.

Foreign Students Committee

Yvonne Reed, chairman of the Foreign Students Committee, recommended that the 10% taken from the Fund Drive proceeds for local scholarships be put back in the fund for foreign students. As of now, there are only $1,200 in the fund, while the cost for one student is $1,550. The Council adopted this as a recommendation for the incoming Council.

The new council will be taking over at next Tuesday's meeting. All representatives should be present.

Committee signups must be in by Tuesday, April 28, either at the CU desk or at the ASG office. Forms may be obtained from the ASG representatives.

Allegheny Alumnus, Dr. Francis Gives Talk On Preventative Medicine

by Ellen McKee

"Adventures in Preventive Medicine," was the topic of a speech given by Dr. Thomas Francis, Jr. at the annual Founders Day Convocation in Ford Memorial Chapel Wednesday at 11:00 a.m. Since 1941 Dr. Francis has been a professor of epidemology at Henry Sewall University and chairman of the department of epidemology at the University of Michigan's School of Public Health.

While at Allegheny, Dr. Francis helped to care for the sick in the great 1918-19 epidemic of influenza that killed 20 million people throughout the world in 3 to 4 months. It was the utter helplessness of medicine in the face of such a crisis that persuaded him to go into the field of preventive medicine.

To show the great medical progress since 1921, Dr. Francis cited examples of diseases which were big killers then but have now been controlled. In particular Dr. Francis told of three research projects with which he had been intimately connected. The first was the development of a preventative for pneumococcal pneumonia from bacterial sugar. This was used during the depression and World War II. The second was classifying and finding a vaccine against the different strains of influenza. Evidence of progress of this project was the speed with which a vaccine was prepared to curb the Asian Flu epidemic of 1957. The third project was finding a vaccine against polio in conjunction with Dr. Salk.

In commenting about research in general Dr. Francis said, "There is a great deal of money available for research, but money is not enough. There is a shortage of qualified people with new ideas." One newly developed research problem is finding a preventative for the adverse effects of radiation. Dr. Francis helped work on this in Japan after World War II.

Dr. Francis also related the idea of prevention to world affairs. "Man is overly concerned with arming for war and repairing the destruction caused by war when he should be concerned with preventing war." He suggested that one of the major aims of a liberal arts college should be to instill the idea of prevention in its students.

Publications Contest For 1959 Announced By "Mademoiselle"

Mademoiselle Magazine has announced its 1959 College Publications Contest.

Awards will be made for the best student-written article, the best faculty-written article, and best alumni written article. These should appear in a college newspaper, feature magazine, or alumni magazine during 1959.

Fifty dollars will be given to the publication, and seventy-five dollars to the author, of the winning entry in each category. Entries will be judged on originality of thought and skill in writing. They should be of interest to college students nationally.

Entries will be submitted by editors of college publications. Winners will be announced by April 1, 1960.

Porter Prize Contest Set

The annual Porter Prize Contest for student musicians will be held in Ford Chapel on Friday, May 1, at 4:15 p.m.

Two prizes are being offered, one for the winning instrumentalist and one for the winning vocalist. The prizes amount to about $40.00 each. The winners are determined by vote of the students in attendance at the contest.

Contestants this year are: in the instrumental division, Joann Molin, Gale Scholes, Doris Holmes, Ann Stone; Singers competing are Joanne Smith, Andrea McCandless, Dorothy Baker, Pat Hawk, John Dunham, Richard H. Smith, Ann Tannehill and Carol First.

Last year George Thoburn was judged to be the most promising singer; Betty Jack won in the instrumental division.

Orchesis To Do Poem Interpretation

Thursday and Friday, April 30 and May 1 at 8:15 p.m., Orchesis will present its interpretation of "John Brown's Body" by Stephen Vincent Benet. The program, an annual event of the modern dance group, will be given in the Playshop.

This year's show is different from anything Orchesis has previously attempted, as it is the interpretation of a story in verse rather than a series of scenes done on one theme. Rod Anderson will present the narration and Steve Perrone is the lighting director.

Other activities of Orchesis are a Wednesday Chapel program presented earlier this year and a banquet to be held soon at which new officers will be elected. This year's president is Pat VanOlinda. Tryouts for the group will be held early in May.

Stadtlander Fund Committee Reports

The committee for the Elizabeth Stadtlander Memorial Fund reports that within a month of the formal announcement of the plan for a book fund, Reis Library has received over $400 from some seventy friends.

Gifts have been received from all over the United States where former students of Miss Stadtlander are teaching or living.

On campus a number of the faculty have already contributed, and a generous gift has been received from Pennsylvania Beta Chapter of Phi Kappa Psi.

The committee for the Stadtlander Memorial Fund, appointed by President Pelletier, includes Miss Roberta Heller, '60, Miss Reba Garvey and Mr. Philip M. Benjamin, with Mr. Charles S. Miller as chairman.

Mastodon Bone Given To College

Another mastodon bone find has been turned over to Allegheny College, Robert B. Coyle, instructor in geology, reported early this week.

What is probably the end of a mastodon femur, or upper leg bone, was found Saturday by a nine year old Conneaut Lake boy. The bone measures 10 inches long, 10 inches thick. There are fragments missing, indicating the bone was severely shattered, Coyle said.

The youth, who had been fishing, saw the bone lying on the surface in the excavated area at the southeastern end of Conneaut Lake. It is believed the bone had been near the surface and was exposed by spring rains.

The college now has four mastodon bones, while two others are at Pittsburgh.

It is theorized that the pre-historic animal was trapped in a bed of clay covered with a thin layer of decaying vegetation more than 5,000 years ago. The first bones were found last spring by workers digging a canal at the end of the lake. Later, several smaller pieces of bone were uncovered at the same spot.

Coyle said examination of the newest find should be completed this week.

The mastodon project has been under direction of William H. Parsons, head of the geology department, now on sabbatical leave work at Grant Institute of Geology of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, where he is a research associate. Dr. Parsons was named to one of 89 science fellowships awarded by the National Science Foundation.

Exploration work at the lake is to be continued, with the hope that a complete mastodon skeleton might be found. Coyle is supervising work during the absence of Dr. Parsons.

Coffee Break At CU Features Foreign Students Discussing US

by Jane Hile

". . . If I could define the United States in one word, I would choose the word organization." Thus spoke Nelson Tolipan, foreign student from Brazil, who was one of the speakers at the 4:00 Coffee Break on Thursday, April 16 in the College Union.

The topic for discussion was: Foreign students look at America from their section of the world. The panel was comprised of Larry Sagini, from Kenya, East Africa; Nelson Tolipan representing South America, Do Huu Nghria from Viet Nam, Yoon Bae Kim from Korea and Frantz Cohn from Denmark.

Larry Sagini opened the discussion by giving a brief resume of the political and geographical conditions of Africa. He said, "I am very thankful I came to America, and I have learned many things while here."

When defining America with the word, "organization," Nelson Tolipan continued that, ". . . when two Americans get together, they get organized." He pointed out that perhaps Americans have become too efficient. Concerning the practice of pinning on campus, he said, "I feel there are deceptions involved for those not mature enough to face it." He concluded with a brief discussion of relations between Brazil and the United States.

The listeners were introduced to Viet Nam through the explicit map drawn by Do Huu Nghria, student from Asia. He explained the relationship of that country to surrounding areas and summed up his speech with a presentation of United States-Viet Nam relationships.

Although Yoon Bae Kim has been in America for four years, he pointed out that he still has much to learn about America and its people. He says that Koreans learn of America and its people through superficial observation such as movies, and exchange student programs. He concluded by saying, "I was struck by the friendliness and expressive nature of the American people."

The last speaker, Frantz Cohn, attempted to explain how antagonistic feelings between Europe and America have arisen, adding that it was partly due to America's materialistic attitudes. A comparison between American and Danish educational systems was drawn, and Frantz said, "I regard most United States schools as weak, but I also feel that perhaps Denmark's educational system is too rigorous."

A brief question and answer period concluded the afternoon's presentation.

Economics Course Cancelled

Due to various circumstances Economics 30, Investments, will not be given next year. Dr. Ainsworth, however, has offered to conduct an informal seminar which will cover much of the same material.

Although this seminar will not be given until the second semester of next year, the economics department would like to know how many students would be interested in participating. A basic knowledge of economics and accounting will be necessary, preferrably up to and including Corporation Finance.

Any student who meets the requirements and would like to attend is asked to sign the list which has been placed on the economics bulletin board, third floor, Bentley.

Suggestions To Further Aim Of "Take Cover Drill" Offered

Ed. Note: This is not a letter to the editor, but a statement of opinion by certain members of the campus community.

On Thursday, April 16, a sheet headed "To All Faculty Members" appeared in campus mailboxes. Its origin was not indicated, but it requested that instructions concerning a "Take Cover Drill" be announced to classes on Thursday morning. The undersigned are thoroughly in accord with the announced purpose of the Drill, and would like to offer a few suggestions for further action towards its aim.

The announced purpose was "to avoid exposure to the various forms of radiation." This statement, in so far as it is not applied to medically prescribed radiation, reflects a goal whose importance scientists have been emphasizing for a decade or longer. We know that men have been killed by insufficiently shielded work with radioactive materials. It is almost certain that the number of victims of leukemia has been increased because of radiation spread throughout the atmosphere by nuclear explosions. It is highly probable that the inherited characteristics of many children born in this and later decades have been and will be inferior because of the same radiation. Therefore, in the spirit of the Drill and of a concern for all people's welfare, we ought to do whatever we can to decrease our own exposure, and everyone's exposure throughout the world.

What can we do beyond participate in a "Take Cover Drill?" The following steps are suggested not with the intention that everyone can take all of them, but that each of us take as many as he can.

1. We can, by letters to Congressmen, Senators, and administrative officials in Washington, urge that every possible diplomatic means be used to achieve a suspension of nuclear tests under an adequate system of United Nations inspection and enforcement.

2. We can urge that the United States, which already has enough bombs to destroy any aggressor, discontinue nuclear tests regardless of what other countries do.

3. We can use old techniques more fully, and search for new techniques, through which to use the resources and prestige of Allegheny in order to make students, faculty, and the general public better informed about the dangers of radiation, and about the gains and losses to be expected if it is increased.

4. Dr. Victor Paschkis was on campus not long ago, speaking for the society for Social Responsibility in Science. We can follow his suggestions by making sure that every physical and social scientist trained by Allegheny College has thought about the use he will make of his skill, and is assured that large numbers of us will support him in any crisis which might result from a refusal to use his skills destructively.

5. We can refuse to be members of any armed services, on the ground that an oath of obedience might some day force us to manufacture, transport, or explode a nuclear weapon, thus spreading radiation which contributes in some measure to the harm of the whole world's population.

We, the undersigned, intend to do what we can in one or more of the above ways. And we call upon the administration, the Faculty Council, and the Allegheny Student Government, to help us, and to provide leadership in, the decrease of our common exposure to harmful radiation.

Trials, Joys Part Of Student Teachers' Work

by Betsy Anderson

"My teacher's a college queen." "Mine's a college honor student." These are the kind of comments that are being heard throughout the Meadville school system when the Allegheny co-ed education majors invade them with their student teaching. There are usually three or four girls in one school so they drive down together about 12:30 and finally get back to Allegheny exhausted, but happy, about 4:00.

The "teachers" start off their classes just standing up in front of the classes introducing themselves and getting acquainted with the children. "All of the time we're standing up in front of those little seven and eight year olds, we are petrified," said one of the girls; "in fact, it's worse than standing in front of a whole audience of adults." After they have memorized most of the names, the "teachers" are promoted to reading and telling stories. In this day and age, this can take some ingenuity because with television and the movies, the pupils have better imaginations than Shakespeare himself.

The student teachers next go on to taking care of the spelling tests, reading groups, and finally taking over the class completely. At first the regular teachers stays in the classroom, a little for help and a great deal for moral support. After the girls have gotten more self-confident and have more control over the children, the "co-operating" or regular teachers often leave the room completely.

Of course, as the old saying goes — "Kids say and do the darndest things," and these "kids" are no different. Naturally all of the girls are single, but that doesn't stop their classes from calling — "Mrs. McDonald" or "Mrs. Hatch!" These twentieth century psychiatrist who asks Will of his sex life. One could swear Professor Tillinghast suffered a trauma in his youth. William Sutter gets the action underway in the first act with a portrayal of a 4-F draft board officer, and Douglas Pickering pulls his stomach up into his chest and overacts the part of the ambitious General Bush, until you know there must be a general in there somewhere. With a cigar in his mouth and egg on his hat, Bush rushes the transfer papers through, bustles his lieutenants about, bustles everyone into the woods and sweeps us all off stage. David Ottey is kind enough to come out and tell us what happened. These incidents act like a shot in the arm to the play and carry it over the rough spots.

The greatest single problem was staging. The production suffered severe technical difficulties in the creation of sets to give environment to the action. Hampered by the lack of space to move large or many sets, they were unable to move the maximum number of sets in the required time. The solution was to create sets that were comic strip in character — flat and sketched in. It was a good solution, but the stage hands were unable to move the sets quickly enough and quietly enough, so the play became stretched thin in places, and some of the lines were lost.

"No Time for Sergeants" has a balance of seriousness that acts as a contrast to set up the punch lines. Rodney Anderson switched from mirth to sobriety very successfully while retaining the humor in the role. Julius and Ottey are more subtle at times in their humor, but one is the exploited Sergeant King by the booby-trap Will Stockdale, and the other is Will Stockdale trying to be a good helper to Sergeant King. This is funny all the time. Richard Averell plays the part of the villian. He is Irvin Blanchard, a "cat" in a black leather jacket and "shades". Irvin had R.O.T.C. and hates plowboys. Averell makes a good, consistent villian and, no matter how ill-intentioned, he is like a breath of fresh air to the high key of comedy

The sheer authority of the principal actors is what makes the production a good comedy. A combination of subtlety slapstick and sheer innocence toward pessimism is always good for a laugh. If one adds the irresistable idea of what happens when an amiable Georgia Cracker, who represents the pioneer all-American boy, is thrown into the military with other all-American boys (a "cat", a sergeant, a harried phychiatrist and a pompous general) one bound to laugh at his way of life. It's the American Way. But you have to see it to believe it.

more people on campus will take advantage of this valuable educational program in the future . . . During the past four years I have seen a great many changes in our academic life. More and more responsibility has been placed on the students' shoulders in the area of scholarship and means of improving. Students participation has been welcomed in various other activities such as helping the foreign students, soliciting for the building fund, etc. I only wish some of the students could see how Allegheny's Student Government ranks in comparison to some of the other schools. I sincerely believe we should all be proud of the system which has rapidly matured in the past four years."

IRC Selects Officers For Coming Year

The first meeting of the International Relations Club under its new officers was held last Thursday. Newly elected president of the group is Elizabeth Miller. Other officers include secretary, Tonda Taylor; and publicity, Nancy West and Doris Wall.

Highlighting the meeting was a discussion by a panel of foreign students on the United Nations in relation to their various countries. Varied opinions were presented by the panel. Some felt doubtful about the power of the UN to prevent war, but it was also felt that the organization was doing much good in the areas of economic aid and international understanding.

The club is planning a trip to Pittsburgh May 1 to participate in a world affairs forum. Those interested in going should give their name to Miss Miller before April 28.

Student Teachers

teachers' room and floor mates are constantly hearing about the problems and incidents of the school children and how they have handled them. One of the most typical is of Tommy, a little second grader, who, during his spelling test, was laboriously copying from a small cheat-sheet clutched in his chubby fist. All at once Susie, his next seat neighbor, raised her hand. "Mrs. Milne, Mrs. Milne, Tommy has his words written down on a piece of paper." "Mrs. Milne" walked slowly back to Tommy wondering what she was going to do, but she didn't have much of a chance. There sat Tommy with a sheepish grin on his little green face, for this quick little thinker had shoved it in his mouth and swallowed it. As "Mrs. Milne" stood over him, not knowing whether to laugh or scold, Tommy turned three different shades of green. This is only one of the many little happenings that come up daily in the student teacher's life.

All of these different aspects give so much experience and help to these future teachers of America. When they are finished with their student teaching, they usually feel self-confident enough to take on almost any job.

All education majors teach one semester in their senior year. After six weeks the co-operative teacher rates her, and the student teacher rates herself. Then they get together with Mrs. Graffius and Dr. Miller, the heads of the respective departments and discuss the grades, as well as the benefits. There is also a semester for the education majors in which they go over methods, ideas, etc.

Perhaps this student teaching, combined with the efforts of the whole education department, which certainly deserves a blue ribbon award, are some of the reasons why Allegheny is turning out such fine teachers.
