Dear Mr. Williams:

I have just heard this morning from Macmillans to whom I sent the Pictorial articles so far as published with some little suggestion about their revision and expansion for a book. I did not think they would consider it but I was wrong and they do. So of course I go along there.

Please believe, dear Mr. Williams, that I appreciate your interest and I should have been glad to let you have the book if it had not been for prior obligations.

I have a letter from Mrs. Martin asking me to send you a word about "Made in America." I am glad to do it and here it is enclosed.

Very sincerely

Mr. John L. B. Williams

"Made In America"

"Made in America" is a provocative book. Its hero sets one going over his acquaintance among high grade speculators ~~industry~~ to find a counterpart. It is difficult to find one so entirely likeable and so lucky in material matters to the very end. It is not only Mrs. Martin's hero who is provocative but her comment on life and things, the product of a mind of strictest integrity intent on finding out and putting down what she ~~thinks~~.
