

UNDER THE AMERICAN PLAN

No III

E. W. Ford
FORWARD

No one of the many experiments now making to correct the abuses and the excesses of our industrial life are of more importance than those which aim at putting the machine in its place - making it the servant not the master of man.

In this article I am setting down what I believe to be the conclusion on mechanization of the experienced workman as well as the principles and practices to which I find intelligent management is committing itself.

Taken as a whole it is a good illustration of the way we handle the evils our recklessness and our selfishness breed.

Ida M. Tarbell

Mr. & Mrs. E. W. Ford