My dear Miss Tarbell:

I expect to be in Boston at the time you name, and it will give me pleasure to talk with you about the article on wool and wool goods you are to prepare. I have obtained the permission of a candid woolen company near Boston to inspect the processes in their mills during your visit.

Regarding the article on a pure textile law which we published, I presume you refer to the enclosed editorial which was aimed at the so-called Grose or shady bill. It is possible to improve conditions by such a law, but those who attempt to bring about legislation should be careful, as the question ^{should} ^{bristle} with technical difficulties.

Nellie Crooks' article in Harper's Weekly contains many errors, and yet it is evidently written by one who is anxious to be just right.
Yours very truly, Saml. J. Dale.
