Dear Dr. Blass:

For the last few months I have not been following my correspondence with care. I was rather over-worked and so I was obliged to take a rest.

Now as to the difficulty you are having in developing your method of oxygen treatment. I have deep sympathy with anyone who believes that he has something useful to humanity and finds himself a ~~blot~~ block in its development. But it is rare indeed that I can do anything about it. I certainly could not help you in your fight to secure the backing and freedom that you need in carrying on your work. My time and strength is already over-mortgaged with things I have undertaken to do.

I am sorry to write you in this way, but it is quite out of the question, dear Dr. Blass, to give you any help, or for me to take up your case.

Hoping that you will find some person younger and stronger than I to aid you, believe me

Very truly yours
