Dear Miss Tarbell,

it is always a great and important hour for me, when I receive one of your critical notes about my essay on Lincoln, and in vain I look forward, in what way I can thank you for ^{your} generous present of time.

(Of course, I used also for the third book all your hints, and you will see the effect in the first publication in "Cosmopolitan", beginning in the fall. We have plenty of time ^{to} correct all my errors for the book-edition, another time, so, that I hope they ₂ will remain only a few mistakes. The fourth and fifth book you will have received by Little, Brown, and I hope the second part will make a better impression than the first, because the translation now is much better.)

So more I studied the character, so more I loved him. I do not remember that any of mine biographies leave to myself a deeper sensation of sympathy.

May I ask your permission, to write in the preface of the book your name , as a great ^{help} for my work ?

With kindest regards from Mrs. Ludwig, I am with many thanks

respectfully yours,
