MORDECHAI I

Samuel Lincoln had been a settler. From 1637 to his death in 1690 he had staied steadily in Hingham. When he died he left behind him 9 children, and of these all but one were residents of Hingham or of what is now Cohasset, which, up to had been a part of Hingham. And all had land assigned them in this portion of Hingham when it was divided in ~~only~~ 2 one of his sons, in fact, had moved out of the colony, and that was the one in whom we are particularly interested, the great-great-great-great-grandfather of Abraham Lincoln, the President.

Mordechai Lincoln's settlement outside of Hingham proper shows how steadily the original group was carrying on its work of subduing the Massachusetts coast, how inevitably if slowly it was spreading into the adjacent colony of Plymouth. They were pushing back the wilderness, discovering its resources, harnessing its power; and in this work Mordechai Lincoln did a valiant part.

MORDECAI II

Learned says: "It is significant that Mordecai Lincoln and Abraham his brother, sons of Mordecai of Hull, migrated to that part of New Jersey in which iron had been found, the Red Bank region, evidently with the expectation that they might be able to develop the iron industry in New Jersey.
