Dear J. S. P.:

It is a shame to torment you with even so short a piece as the enclosed, but I have been having a terrible tustle trying to get a Foreword for the Young book. This is the result. Won't you give me your judgment of it?

I hope you are feeling better. I am off for the country tomorrow but expect now to be down Sunday night or Monday morning. If you should be coming into town you can give me your notion of the piece by word of mouth.

Faithfully yours
