Dear Miss Bruere:

I have dictated hastily the story you told me of the Bank President in Addison, Michigan. I am sure that you can add to it in thought and color. I would like very much if we could work it out in a way that would be useful and also would not in any way involve the woman, whose name I did not take, and I am sorry to say, have forgotten.

I am to be away for a week but when I come back, I will see how it can be used if you will return me the notes with your corrections. Or if you prefer I shall drop in and we can talk it over.

I enjoyed my lunch with you the other day very much. Thank you for your generous giving.

Sincerely yours

Dictated but
