Dear Miss Tarbell:

I cannot remember when a letter pleased me more than yours of May 22nd.

This weekend Mrs. Javits asked me when I expect to carry you off to our place at Westport, and I said that I would do so just as soon as I got word that you were feeling better. I shall take the liberty of phoning your house in Connecticut some time in the not distant future, and hope that you may consent to either being visited for a few moments by Mrs. Javits and our two young children or spending an hour with us at Westport.

I should like to call your attention to one point, which I am not quite sure is made as clear as it should be in the book, and that is that government, in the final analysis, from my standpoint is the courts. The courts have been on the whole very understanding. I should like to clarify this point further if you feel that what I have just said is not clear enough.

I am deeply grateful and the publishers are of course delighted with your letter.

With warmest regards and best wishes for a speedy recovery,
I am

Sincerely yours,
