My dear Mr. Robinson:

How very kind of you to write me an encouraging word about the Owen D. Young book. I have not been at all satisfied with it. That is, I know it is not as good a book as I ought to have written and think I could if I had a year or more time. However, if you and Mrs. Robinson think it has interest and gives a little of the look of the future, which I see in Mr. Young, I am somewhat consoled.

Thank you for calling my attention to the review in the London Times. I am sending out for it as I have not seen it.

One of these days I hope that I can have another talk with you and Mrs. Robinson. Perhaps you will give me a little more fully, and perhaps with some criticism, your reaction to what I have written, for you see I do not want to give up the subject. I am sure Mrs. Robinson will miss any reference to Mr. Young as a collector, that is, any sufficient reference, but I did not have the space and the time to do anything at all adequate so I gave up the idea. However, in a growing man there is always material for the journalist.

Thanking you again for your letter,
believe me

Very sincerely yours

Mr. Nelson L. Robinson
