

Memo - Young

Power

In Mr. Reynold's letter of October 28th he writes:

"I think that sometime when you are up near Albany you might like to talk with the Reverend M. J. Dwyer. His address is:
Care Church of St. Ambrose
Latham, New York

Fr. Dwyer was a former District Attorney in Boston and came into the office here in 1909 or 1910. I think he might be able to give you something of value.

"I suggested to you that Hiram C. Todd had been in Senator Brackett's office and might give you some information about Adirondack. I did not give you his address then. It is:
Care Messrs. Baldwin, Hutchins & Todd
120 Broadway
New York

Called my attention to Mr. Todd next week. I will try and make an engagement.

In an address given in November, 1925, No. 29 of Speeches - Young talks of using the water power of New England as a whole. He agrees that the public service commission of the State should agree upon the plans. He looks to an integrated adequate network of transmission throughout New England. Good example of his imagination. A comment that is pertinent (See Page 8) is in regard to the feeling that power should not be transmitted outside the State. Economically it can't be helped because as Young says, "Political division only rarely coincides with an economic one."
