Mr. Ferdinand Herold,
Paris, France.

My dear Mr. Herold:

On receipt of your article on Baudelaire, which, let me say, I read myself with real pleasure, I sent it at once to Mr. Canby of The New Republic. I am enclosing his letter, returning the sketch, as it will help you to get the point of view of the New Republic. I hope you can see your way to follow his suggestion and try some political, social or economic subject of current interest.

When the article came back, I passed it along to Mr. Canby of the Literary Review of the New York Evening Post - altogether the best weekly review that we now have in the country. I enclose his letter. Would it not be possible for you to follow his idea and give him the 1600 words, presenting the general idea of the study of the French pacifist tradition which you have in mind? It would be an entering wedge with them.

I am sending the Baudelaire article today to one of my friends on The Freeman, hoping that they will be able to find a place for it.

Very sincerely yours,
