This might provide Lecture

I had worked on one item which I thought might prove practical and that was that in two years I should return to America for a few months. It should be in the summer and I would finance my trip and my vacation by delivering lectures on the women of the French Revolution, the French women writers of today, possibly other very obvious things. I speculated on getting a series at Chautauqua, if not at Chautauqua there were other Chautauqua Assemblies at that time thriving, scattered over the country where they might take me. And in the Fall I might persuade certain Women's Clubs to engage me for my series. ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ This idea seemed practical to me because I actually had a few times talked before groups of American women in Paris - in Paris of all places. I had talked on Madam Roland and not a few women who had settled in the city had apparently liked what I had to say and had invited me to their Salon, to repeat the talk. But of course there was no pay for this, but it gave me the idea that I might could give in the public in America, then could propose to do in the public in Paris
