Dear Mrs. Towles:

Indeed I do remember our visit at the Samuel Tilden House. I have been interested in the reports I have had from the Transylvanians and I am particularly glad to know of the Audubon Museum. I wish that I might accept your invitation to have a look at it, and particularly to see The Transylvanian Room. However, I am afraid my days for junketing about to look at the interesting things in the country are over. I have had a year and a half of hospital and convalescence and have concluded that keeping quiet is the medicine I need.

This scheme of life gives me more time to think about matters in which I am interested, particularly am I glad to have this Rutledge document to put with the few I have gathered. Very good of you, dear Mrs. Towles, to remember my interest. The best of success to you and the Transylvanians.

Sincerely yours,
