Dear Miss Tarbell:

In accordance with our conversation on June 28th, I take pleasure in making to you the following proposition regarding the subscription or mail order rights of "The Life of Lincoln":

First: S. S. McClure Company agrees to pay you on all sets sold from August 1st, 1910, until August 1st, 1915, except two thousand nine hundred and seventy-five (2,975) sets now printed and on hand, a royalty amounting to five per cent (5%) of the selling price to the public of the books.

Second: That in consideration of this concession on the part of this Company, you will guarantee it a free and unrestricted use of the subscription or mail order rights on this work for a period of five (5) years, beginning August 1st, 1910, this guarantee to include full protection from any and all claims or interference which may be made or attempted by holders of the copyright or owners of the trade rights.

THIRD: During that time you will agree that "The Life of Lincoln" shall not be sold by subscription, or mail order, either separately or in an edition of your works by any publishing house or concern, except S. S. McClure Company.

Fourth: That S. S. McClure Company shall be free to make plates for new editions of the work as it desires.

It is, of course, understood that there will be no change in the biography without your consent. It is further understood, and is admitted by you that this Company now has absolute ownership in the subscription or mail order rights of "The Life of Lincoln" and that the payment of the royalties above agreed to be paid, and the making of this agreement in no way constitutes any waiver of this Company's rights or ownership, or any admission, in derogation or denial of those rights.
