Dear Miss Prink:

Here are the first twenty five galley proofs of the Owen D. Young. I have been over them carefully, but please caution your proof reader to be careful. I am not to be depended upon when it comes to typographical errors.

Two chapters of the book have appeared in The American Magazine. I suppose there should be a note acknowledging them. Is the following correct phraseology?

"Acknowledgment is here made of the courtesy of The American Magazine in permitting the reprinting in this book of the parts which have appeared in its pages."

I do not know the correct place for such a paragraph, but take it that you have a practice in the matter.

Very sincerely
