My dear Mr. Curtiss:

I have just come to town and find awaiting me your letter of June 29, with notes of the talk that I gave at the Lincoln dinner on June 15.

You say that you want to put the address in booklet form and ask that I expand it. I am sorry, dear Mr. Curtiss, not to be able to grant your request. I have run over the copy that you sent me, have made some verbal changes, and am having the result copied for you. It is quite out of the question for me to do any more work on it now. It seems to me quite sufficient for the little booklet, which I suppose is to be made up of the addresses given at the dinner.

I want to thank you for the photostat copies of the letters sent.

Sincerely yours
