OFFICE OF
THE PRESIDENT

December 6, 1933

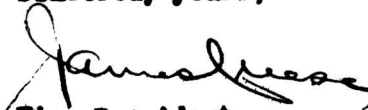

My dear Miss Tarbell:

In the rush of the last few days, perhaps no one here has had time to tell you how delighted we all were with your essay in the Herald Tribune last Sunday. We are binding together for presentation to Mrs. Taylor some of the many tributes to her husband and his work, and of course the clipping from the Herald Tribune has a place of high honor in that collection.

President King of Amherst has sent me the manuscript which he may follow in speaking about Taylor here tomorrow night. I think it is a delightful little essay on Mr. Taylor as one of the great teachers of modern times.

I am sending you two copies, thinking that perhaps among your editorial friends there may be one who would like to read this and to quote from it on an editorial page.

Sincerely yours,

Vice President
