Dear Miss Tarbell:

I am enclosing a long letter about your article which the writer asks to have referred to you.

Some little time ago I wrote to you about an article to be called "God's Place in a Busy Life." At that time you had too much work on hand to undertake it, and so I took back the suggestion in order to try to get an article for immediate use. I have asked only one other person about it — Bruce Barton — and he said that he did not have the material. If, therefore, you still feel that you can do such an article, I shall be glad to have you do it at your convenience, but, of course, I should not want it too long delayed.

Sincerely,

encl.
