Bricks

The ~~Books~~ of The New Deal:

James Mills talks of the New Deal. ~~In~~ I try out on him what has been floating around in my mind that what is going into this are sound bricks that industry itself has been making through the last thirty five years, particularly, these trade associations the beginnings of which ~~in the~~ iron and steel during ~~were~~ met ~~with~~ such an outcry by a ~~factious~~ public, ~~by competition have grown and grown until~~ now that the industries are asked by the government to make ~~for~~ themselves codes they have practically, all of them, ~~appreciation which has~~ been working ~~on many of the same problems that the New Deal orders solved.~~ ~~Neither~~ one in these associations have solved ~~those~~ problems. That is, they have been carrying on through a good many years now a process of experimental planning - self-correction. Davis books is of great importance in getting this clearly before the public and it is what gives hope of the success of the New Deal, for that New Deal goes along the lines ~~of a better character~~ than our industry ~~has ever seen.~~

~~Certain things follow an orderly industry and have been long. If we are to have counsel; the New Deal, itself, can not cover as wide a field in what it plans~~
