Dear Miss Tarbell:

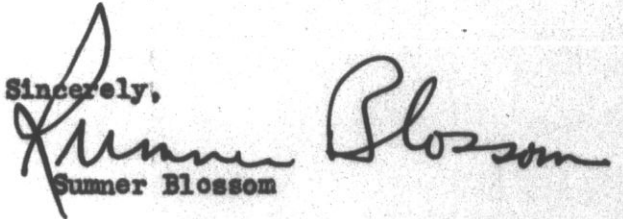

We have the second Young article and since we do not plan to use it to follow the first article immediately, I think it well to hold it until the third article is completed. Then we can discuss revisions on both of them at one time.

While there is no immediate rush, if you want to send me the outline for the remaining piece, I shall be very glad to make any suggestions that I can. I do not feel, however, that the time is so pressing that you need come in from the country for the purpose of going over this with me, unless, of course, you prefer to do so.

Meantime, we will send you a check at the end of next week for the second article.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Summer Blossom
