Dear Miss Tarbell:-

As an ardent admirer of your good works and words, I take the opportunity to enclose a poem(?) based on the birth of our patron-saint, Abraham Lincoln. It should have been forwarded to you so as to reach you by the twelfth - his natal day - but I feel that it is not too late, even now, for lovers of Lincoln share a bond of friendship that is as imperishable as his name and fame.

I beg you to accept the verses as a token of respect and esteem, and as an expression of fellowship in Lincoln. Should the poem possess any merit, I wish you might tell me so. Believe me -

Yours Sincerely,
Harry O. Knerr,

THE BIRTH OF LINCOLN

Winter winds howled round a cabin,
Inside lay a little child-
Restless in its virgin armor,
Pure and gentle, meek and mild;
Close beside her dearest treasure,
Nancy Lincoln, young and fair,
Faintly whispered in the gloaming
Words of suppliance and prayer.
'Twas the twilight's crimson curtain
Falls the night upon the land,
Folding all the earth in slumber
By the touch of God's own hand.
In the starlight, in the moonlight,
In the watchnight everywhere-
Not an augury from Heaven
Stirred the palpitating air.

In the morning, crisp and early,
All along the winding trails
Of the forests, dank and hoary,
Blew the cold and icy gales-
But, inside that lonely cabin
Gleamed a fir, warm and bright,
Kindled by dear neighbor, Enlow,
In the watches of the night.
Oh, there's joy in every bosom!
Love, to bless and sanctify
As a stalwart father enters
Where the babe and mother lie.
Silent prayers in whispered accents
Fall upon the threshold there-
Like celestial benedictions
On a world of toil and care.

Mother-love, so pure and sacred,
Fate, so bountiful and blest.
Meekly smiled upon his pathway,
Made his mission manifest;
Days of toil in field and forest,
Arduous tasks to clear the lands,
Poverty and want and sorrow,
Aching limbs and calloused hands.
Weathered in the school of Nature,
Growing like a stately tree,
Seeking wisdom, truth and knowledge
At the fount of Liberty.
Governed by a humane passion,
Merciful and kind was he-
"Honest Abe", the destined saviour
Of a Nation proud and free.
