Dear Mrs. Young:

When I was at St. Lawrence last Spring I spent a few hours going over the files of The Laurentian from 1890 to 1894. I was looking for the tracks that Mr. Young had left behind him, but I was not blind to your own footsteps. The enclosed is one of them. You may have forgotten all about it - probably have - but it is a fine piece and if you do not object I should like to quote, at least the last two paragraphs. Do you mind? I hope not.

I have been hoping that there would be a day soon when you would have strength and inclination to let me run in and see you. I am tied up Tuesday and Friday of this week but free every other afternoon. But if it is not wise for you to let me come this week there are other weeks coming every one of which I am hoping will find you stronger.

Faithfully yours
