

July 10, 1924

Dear Rutger:

Here are the agreements, properly signed.

They seem to me to cover our understanding satisfactorily. I have little doubt now about carrying the work to completion. As I think I wrote you, I see the theme. It is one in which I heartily sympathize, and it shows Gary at his best. I think we can agree to disagree on certain points and manage it in such a way that neither the book nor the Judge nor I will sell our souls.

I shall be in town all of next week, and possibly we can manage to get together. Alice and Cale are coming, as you probably know, so I am making no definite engagements until I find out what their plans are.

Faithfully yours,