Dear Miss Chandlers

At last I have been able to secure from Macmillans a copy of Owen D. Young to send to you. They have been holding them back for the day of publication, - next Tuesday.

I expect you will find errors - I hope not too many - and I shall appreciate it if you will let me know what they are. The first thing my eye fell upon when I opened the book was the mis-placing of the two pages of accounts - 34 and 35 - not my fault, though the one other I found was entirely mine - General instead of Governor Moreau in the caption opposite Page 200.

Mrs. Wolfe is taking down to you the photographs you were good enough to lend. I hope that you will find them in good condition. I have added the originals of the facsimile from the Boston University School of Law, also that of the title page "Exercises in Practice and Pleading." A photograph, too, of the mule car which figured in the El Paso negotiations.

I was greatly tempted to steal the photograph of mother Young as well as that of Mr. Young and his pipe. You will know whether my honesty can be rewarded or not.

Mrs. Young was good enough to let me have her photograph as you know. I think it lovely and I begged her to let me keep it. She was gracious and said, yes. But my conscience has troubled me thinking it might be the only one, if so I feel as if I ought to send it back to her. Ought I?
