My dear Miss Tarbell,

I see that you are to be identified with a new magazine...or rather with a new management of an old one, accordingly I write to suggest to you the following:

Some special articles of mine, on the Drama, published a few years since, in the BOOKMAN, created, I was editorially informed, an unusually wide spread interest. I myself received a great many letters asking for more, and more detailed work that would be helpful to those interested in the art of playwriting, and a general audience desirous of witnessing plays with a sharpened sense of criticism, ...Many things interfered with my taking up the matter at the time, but now I am desirous of so doing, if I can find a suitable medium. Do you care to have me undertake such a department in your magazine...I mean a general review of dramatic happenings with a little special criticism which, while sound, shall not be too academic to be popular?

With best wishes, Sincerely,

Marquerite Merinton
